

Database Design Study Guide

- A Key Contains More than one Attribute
- Benefits of Adding a Parameter to a Query
- Character Used to Indicate Which Operation Should be Performed First
- Creating a Criteria for a Query that Matches a Range of Values
- Data Type Used to Store Long Passages of Data Containing Text and Alphanumeric Characters
- Data Types in SQL
- Dialog Box used to Change a Join Type
- Different Views
- Fields Storing Monetary Data
- How to Add Field Manually
- Input Mask Rule
- Input Mask Task
- Logical Operators
- Order of Columns, Returned by a SQL Select
- SQL Clause to Sort the Results of a Select Query in Reverse-Alphabetic Order
- SQL Keywords
- SQL Word used to Eliminate Duplicate Rows
- The Field that Lets the User Select a Field Value From a List of Existing Field Values Stored in the Database or from a List of Values Specified when the Field was Created
- Types of Controls
 - Does Not Have Source Data
 - A Label that Displays the Title of a Report
- Types of Queries
- Types of Report Lists Field
- Types of Reports
- Validation Text
- Where Calculations can be used in a Report
- XML Documents